PROF. GROOME'S BOOK TO BE TRANSLATED INTO ARABIC

Carlisle, PA., March 18, 2015 — Penn State's Dickinson Law announced today that The Humanitarian Law Centre will translate Professor Dermot Groome's book, Handbook of Human Rights Investigation, into Arabic. The translation is part of a broader initiative funded by the U.S. Department of State to promote human rights around the world. The Humanitarian Law Centre has previously translated Professor Groome's book into Serbo-Croatian as part of an OSCE funded project.

Below are some of the reviews of the 2011 edition of the book.

"Professor Groome has put together an impressive and thoughtful compendium of best practice in the investigation of human rights and humanitarian law violations..."

Richard J Goldstone

"The Handbook is a comprehensive guide for human rights investigators. It is practical, accessible and an invaluable tool for those committed to doing thorough documentation of human rights abuses."

Salil Shetty — Secretary General, Amnesty International

"Dermot Groome, a highly experienced and regarded international criminal prosecutor, has brought together the practical knowledge necessary for investigating human rights abuses. Just as importantly, he has placed this useful information in an understandable and clear legal and ethical framework...it should be by the side of all those involved in human rights investigations."

David Tolbert, President, International Center for Transitional Justice

The First Edition of Dermot Groome's Handbook of Human Rights Investigation established itself as an indispensable tool for the human rights investigator. The Second Edition surpasses it, and cements Dermot's reputation as an attorney/investigator who can clearly and concisely explain how to conduct these complex and difficult inquiries. The Handbook is an essential guide for human rights investigators worldwide.

John Ralston, Executive Director, Institute for International Criminal Investigation

"Considered a cornerstone text by many leading human rights investigators and activists."
The Humanitarian Law Center.
